Apple Valley, CA — Shortening showers, removing grass, and turning off the faucet more quickly are a few common examples of how to conserve water, but what about mulching your landscape to reduce evaporation or learning how to monitor your home’s water meter? These methods and many more will be the topic of an on-line workshop that will teach participants how to prepare their homes and gardens for the warm weather that will be here soon.

“‘Summer-izing’ To Save Water” is the second of five online classes offered free to the public by the Mojave Water Agency, in partnership with the Mojave Desert Resource Conservation District, as part of the Agency’s mission to sustainably conserve water and empower communities to thrive for generations to come.

All workshops are held online via Zoom. To receive the attendance link, register on-line at: <https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/ZBNL7DY>
